We live in South Fort Myers period and evacuated a week ago Wednesday. We came up to my hometown of Wisconsin Rapids and spent some time there where we saw some family and friends. Now we are in the Milwaukee area with our son. Our electricity did get back on yesterday so come Sunday morning we will head home. And luckily we have a home. We only had minimal damage but others in our condominium Park did not fare as well. The ones who stayed have done a phenomenal job of cleaning up already. And we will be pitching in as soon as we get back. We came through this a whole lot better than a lot of our neighbors to the south in Naples and the keys. And also some of the neighbors to the north. My daughter-in-law's parents and her brother live in Jacksonville where there has been a lot of flooding. They have also fared better than some. You can't control Mother Nature. As far as I'm concerned it's still Paradise that we live in. We moved from Tornado Alley in Oklahoma to the hurricane regions of Florida. Thanks to all who sent their well-wishes to us

I took many years of toe and ballet. I have been teaching ball room dance for around 30 years, I also teach swing. I worked at JC Penny's in college, I worked in the undergarment area. On Christmas eve some of the men would come in after too many drinks and say I need a sexy brassiere for my wife, she is about this big. It was funny but sad.

The only item I have any comment on is number 1. Back in the 1980's I was in a local theater group and we were doing the musical "Anything Goes". That show called for a lot of tap dancing. I and three other guys took 6 tap lessons from a certified female dance instructor and none of us could make our ankles work like that. Eventually the director changed the script such that the ladies in the cast did the tap dancing.

1. Dance lessons. I took a ballroom dance class in college as a gym credit. It was the best, most practical class I ever had. Good exercise, too. We learned all the basic dances, and I felt confident that I could handle any dancing situation. Then I married a guy who didn't care to dance. Oh, well.

10. Whatever else - A few newsletters ago there was a question about how technology might have changed our lives. I was thinking of three little ways technology has made my life different. 1. I don't wear a watch anymore because I check my cell phone when I want to know the time. 2. I don't talk on the phone nearly as often as I used to because I text family and friends. 3. Caller ID means I rarely answer the phone unless I know who is calling. So different than back in the day when the phone rang and you answered, sometimes without a clue. Of course there weren't so many telemarketers back then either.

What should we do with North Korea..... blow that bad haired fat little out of the water ..
I will probably get a lot of hate mail for the comment, but before everyone gets their panties in a twist that is my feeling
