Response to last week's newsletter

Susan Hammel - gourmay1@gmail.com

WHAT??? may I kindly ask is "inner Wisconsin?"
Who thought of that? Weird!

This week's topics:

1. Celebrating Halloween? How? Decorating house? Got a pic?
2. Ever been visited by a ghost, poltergeist or demon? When? Where?
3. Carving a pumpkin this year? For grandkids or? Got a pic?
4. Ever build a soap box derby type kids car? When? Race it?
5. What are the differences in education now compared to when we went to school?
6. Serving anything unusual to the trick or treaters this year? What?
7. Did your home ever get "tricked"? How?
8. Ever raise chickens in your back yard? When? For eggs?

9. What game have you spent the most hours playing?

10. Care to vent about something that's disturbing you? Go ahead.

I am going to vent about drivers, the light turns red and drivers still go through, during a snow storm or rain storm they don't turn on lights , and if I saw someone actually use their blinkers I would die a happy person. When the yellow light comes on 10 cars think they can get through it before it turns red and then they just keep going through.

Our church is holding a "trick in the trunk " for kids in a depressed area for safety. Say a prayer of thanksgiving for Bill. Two weeks ago he went to the ER with heart problems, had a stent put in his main artery, only to have a stroke the following day. He was airlifted to a university hospital and came home four days later. He has headaches and some loss of peripheral vision but is pretty good otherwise. Luckily we found great care.

Definitely carving pumpkins with our grandson.

Some differences between education then and now...we didn't need or use any electronic gadgets (calculators, for example); history was non-partisan and so were our teachers. We respected our teachers and we respected our flag and our country. We were expected to attend school. We didn't spend classroom time watching movies. I could go on but I never took a typing class. I learned cursive writing and have always used it extensively. Hmm, seems that is also no longer taught.

I love Solitaire and have played it since I was a youngster.

This weak, cowardly farce of "impeachment hearings" being perpetrated by the Democrats has me gritting my teeth in frustration. Their lying and hypocrisy knows no bounds! I'm so offended by their arrogance and their assumption that we, the people, are too stupid to see through them. Ugh! Grrr! There! I have vented!

Have a great week, everyone!

1. Celebrating Halloween? - No decorating or party.
2. Ever been visited by a ghost, poltergeist or demon? - No.
3. Carving a pumpkin this year? - Maybe get one and put in front of the door.
4. Ever build a soap box derby type kids car? - Nope, isn't done in San Diego.
5. What are the differences in education now compared to when we went to school? OMG! A lot happened; no cursive in the elementary schools now, and computers are used sometime in class.
6. Serving anything unusual to the trick or treaters this year? - No, my husband got 3 big bags of goodies from Costco.
7. Did your home ever get "tricked"? How? No, never got "tricked." It's cute to see the young kids when they go up the 2 sets of stairs to the 2 doors, and get their candy, and then turn down the stairs and then say "which way do I go?"
8. Ever raise chickens in your back yard? When? - My parents did raise chickens once on the farm, but not worth it.
9. What game have you spent the most hours playing? Fish or war or the board with marbles.
10. Care to vent about something that's disturbing you? Go ahead. Not much "disturbing" me; not worth it, and I'm a proud Dem, and glad to see that the South has been changing from its Republican roots.
