Breaking the law - Yes...before I was 18 myself and a bunch of friends would go up to Point and get in the bars and party.

1. I have knowingly broken traffic laws like exceeding the speed limit, making U-turns where signs said I shouldn't, walked across intersections without permission from the walk indicators, and things like that. I have also knowingly hunted on some land that was posted as not allowing trespassing. Can't think of anything else, but I'm guessing other posts may remind me.
2. No
3. In college I was a teaching assistant in a surveying course. I had an older gentleman in class (probably near 70) with all the other kids. This was during the time of the Vietnam protests in the late sixties. Often the kids wanted to vent their feelings at the beginning of a class and I allowed that for 5 minutes. One day a young radical type was complaining about police actions to thwart long haired protestors and asked rhetorically, "I wonder what they would do if Jesus Christ was among us?" And the older gentleman raised his hand and said, "If I remember correctly, they crucified Him." No more discussion, time for class.

4. I believe in God because He has revealed himself to me many times in various situations. I sometimes wonder why He fails to reveal himself to others, but it may just be that they don't perceive Him when He does.
 5. Latest time zone issue I remember is driving to Florida the last week of January 2015 and crossing from Central Time to Easter Time and then back to Central Time while traveling east in TN.
